Let's Start!

Be careful how you confront the situation!

Learning Outcome

Identify and describe rules and obligations through a wider range of language and expressions in both work and social contexts.

Can Do Statements

- I can manage a delicate meeting with an important client.
- I can talk about jobs and work.
- I can give a presentation.

Ask your partner:

- Who do you think does a good job at handling difficult meetings?
- Why do you think so?

Let's Explore!

I was outraged when I heard the news about the attack.

* "Outraged" means someone is completely angry and shocked.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Janet: Hello Mr. Farmani. I understand you have looked into the issue I brought forward yesterday?
- Farmani: I have. Shocking. I'm outraged. You must believe that this has been all behind my back.
- Janet: I believe you. Let's speak directly then. We have two general problems and I have a third. However, it may lead to a solution.
- Farmani: I'm listening.
- Janet: Miranda?
- Miranda: Firstly, although this wasn't your fault, we have the ethical situation of child labor. Bad business is not illegal in Tindasia. We will not have to worry about criminal charges.
- Farmani: Never.
- Miranda: However, it leads to problem number two: bad press. Several concerns are circulating. Workers do not receive enough wages. They have too few benefits. They have little job security.
- Farmani: I have no knowledge of this.
- Miranda: It's all over social media. We must have no child labor AND we must address some rights for adults. Employ more adults and give them some security. We have a number of suggestions to deal with business and image concerns. You mentioned a third problem?
- Farmani: Coincidentally, I have long been familiar with the community of Shalopolis.
- Janet: How so?
- Farmani: My father funded drinking wells there, and to continue his legacy I have been sponsoring children.
- Janet: Amazing!
- Farmani: Now you see that I have a vested interest in this community. Mr. Farmani, I believe that you are in a position to bring changes.
- Miranda: You may soon be known as a human rights advocate, Mr. Farmani.
- Farmani: Hmmmm! Well, you're the ones who know how to work with the media.

Let's Practice!

Janet's sentences are all jumbled*.

* "Jumbled" means mixed up in a confused or untidy way.

Instructions: Organize the mystery sentence. Read the sentences aloud. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

Giving hope

Extension Activity

Write a dialogue encouraging a colleague through a difficult situation!

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Imagine that you have a business partner whose bad choices have led you into a difficult situation.
- Write a dialogue presenting some background information to your partner about the consequences of these choices and how they've affected you.
- Then provide your business partner with some hope. Assume the best about him or her as you write your statements of encouragement.
- Read your dialogue aloud with a partner.

Target Words

- to bring forward (expression): to present or introduce something to be seen, heard or discussed
e.g. I understand you have looked into the issue I brought forward yesterday?
- keep behind one's back (expression): to keep something secret while pretending things are different e.g. You must believe that this has all been kept behind my back.
- criminal charges (noun): a formal accusation that you have done something against the law and could be punished e.g. You will not have to worry about criminal charges.
- coincidentally (adverb): by chance at the same time
e.g. Coincidentally, I have long been familiar with the community of Shalopolis.
- to be familiar with (expression): to know about something for a long time
e.g. Coincidentally, I have long been familiar with the community of Shalopolis.

Learning Points

Managing a Delicate Meeting

When a business crisis arises, people may worry and begin to lose their confidence in the situation, in themselves, or each other. Meetings must be handled delicately to avoid relationship breakdown. Delicate wording of your questions and assumptions is important.

A way to handle such delicate situations is to show confidence in your business partner or employee. Assume the best about people, give hope, and show that you believe in them.

1. Assuming the best = you don't really know but you want to believe they are making good decisions and doing good work.

Examples

- I understand that you have written up the report?
- I believe that you've spoken with Ryan?
- Although this wasn't your fault ... the last shipment arrived too late.

2. Giving Hope = point out what is positive in any situation. When things are looking good, mention it, and when things are looking really bad, find something to make it not seem so discouraging.

Examples

- Robert's latest assignment may lead to an answer.
- There is hope that the new government may turn things around.
- At least we won't need to worry about losing the other shares. (a bad situation)
- We might quickly see some returns in the other investment. (a good situation)

Assuming the Best	Giving Hope
I believe you have ...	... may lead to a solution/an answer.
I understand that you have ...	There is hope that ...
Although this wasn't/isn't your fault ...	You won't have to worry about ... (something bad)
Although the situation was beyond your control ...	At least ... (something bad) ... won't happen.
I believe you.	You may soon ... (something good)
I'm sure of that.	We might quickly ... (something good)

Quantifiers

Learning Points

When presenting information, we often need to quantify. Background information is usually unspecific. It is not the time to present the details of exact figures and amounts, but we must give some indication for a general idea of the situation. We do this by using quantifiers of general amounts.

You use certain quantities with count nouns and others for non-count nouns.

For instance, work is not a count noun. It is never used in the plural. However, tasks and assignments are countable. Therefore, to indicate that your business partner has done a small amount of work, you may say:

He has done little work.

(or using the negative)

He has not done much work.

But tasks, jobs and assignments are specific. They are count nouns so you may say:

He has done few jobs

He has not done many assignments .

	Extreme	Small Amount	Neither large nor small Amount	Large Amount	Extreme count	not ... any ... none of ...	a few (of) ... not many ... not that many ...	some ... several ... various ... a fair number of ...	many ... a great ... numerous ... plenty of ...	all of ... all ... each of ... each ... every one of ... every ...
non-count	nothing ... no ... none (of) ... not ... (verb) ... any ...	few ... a little ... a bit of ... not much of ...	some (of) ... a fair bit of ...	plenty of ... much ... a lot of ...	all ... all of ... everything ...

Examples:

- None of our clients arrived. (count)
- None of our staff arrived. (non-count)
- A few of our clients are late. (count)
- Not much of our staff is late. (non-count)

Learning Points

- A fair bit of our country was hit by tornadoes. (non-count)
- A fair number of our provinces were hit by tornadoes. (count)
- Many employees on strike. (count)
- Much of the staff is on strike. (non-count)
- I'll do each of the assignments. (count)
- I'll do all the work. (non-count)
