Let's Start!

Why are we going through a crisis stage again?

Learning Outcome

Identify and describe rules and obligations through a wider range of language and expressions in both work and social contexts.

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about jobs and work.
- I can plan a strategy to solve a problem.
- I can present background information.

Ask your partner:

- How do you think people feel when the workplace has a crisis?
- What do you think is the most difficult stage of a crisis?

Let's Explore!

Re-evaluating and future-proofing.

* To "future-proof" something means to prepare it for possible future problems.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Miranda: Great ideas everyone. Yes, stage four, going through treatment, can be a wearying stage. Developing strategies for recovery can take long and be discouraging. But growth happens with recovery. The fifth stage is a time of learning and re-evaluation so that it is possible to prepare for and avoid future challenges. And so the cycle goes.

Recently, Polygon faced a disheartening crisis. The crisis seriously affected the economy, but we stopped it with a solution shortly after detection. And we learned that we have a strong staff that works together. Now we are facing a new challenge which may take longer. We have diagnosed the problem and developed strategies. We have decided to take action, but we need everyone's committed support as we continue.

In short, we have discovered that the factory where Holly's outsources its labor employs young children. This is an extremely poor community that we would like to help, but not by employing children. Farmani has probably not been fully informed of the situation. We will approach him and try to find solutions together. However, since the discovery came through social media, the situation will probably become very public. We will make sure you are informed. Please be encouraged by Polygon's ethical position and ability to overcome this challenge. Let's face this problem as an opportunity to learn and grow. We will overcome if we keep up our hope and work together.

Simple Past and Present Perfect

When providing background information, we are usually referring to facts or events that are situated in the past. The Simple Past Tense is used to simply state these events or situations. When we want to mention these events in light of consequences that are experienced now, we use the Present Perfect Tense.

The Present Perfect Tense is formed with the present tense of 'to have' + the Simple Past form of the main verb (the Past Participle).

Event - Simple Past	Consequence of Event - Present Perfect
There was a lot of rain last week ...	... so the garden has grown well.
We had a difficult deadline today ...	... and we have met it.
They experienced so much stress ...	... that they have become very anxious.

The consequence may begin the sentence as well.

Consequence - Present Perfect	Event - Simple Past
We have managed to reduce ...	... the debt we built last year.
People have responded ...	... because he asked for help.
He has been discouraged ...	... by the poor report he received.

Examples:

- We had a situation in the office last week that was distressing.
- The distressing situation we experienced (event: simple past) has left us uneasy.
- Because of what happened, many workers have thought of quitting.

I Can Plan a Strategy to Solve a Problem

Planning and developing strategies to carry out plans is a big part of successful business activity. As we plan our next steps we use the future tense. We use words that express intentions and other expressions that encourage people to come on board with our ideas.

Examples of Plans:

- I will approach our client with some figures.
- We will ensure that every document is perfect.
- We will face this crisis with optimism.
- We will certainly manage finances if we keep careful records of our inventory.
- I'll try to keep our profile low for now.

Examples that encourage people to join the plan:

- Let's make sure we keep each other informed.
- Please be encouraged by this small progress.
- Please be careful to keep this news quiet.
- We will reach our goals if we keep focused.
