Let's Start!

Researching Crisis Management online.

Learning Outcome

Exchange information about people's interests and backgrounds using a wider range of language.

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about jobs and work.
- I can organize points in an argument.
- I can solve problems.

Ask your partner:

- How often have you experienced a crisis in the workplace?
- Who is responsible for dealing with crises at work?

Let's Explore!

This is the point of no return!

* The "point of no return" is the place where you can only continue to go forward.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

There are four main stages of crisis management. Managing a business crisis is not unlike managing an illness.

First is the Early Warning Stage. Warning signs appear that something may be wrong in the business. This is similar to the early symptoms of an illness which is not yet recognizable. Feeling tired, for instance, might be a warning that a person is developing a simple cold or a serious illness. Serious crises are often prevented with the right attention just as many illnesses are prevented with rest or healthy food.

Second is the Serious Crisis Stage. This is the point of no return. The problem is now identified, like an illness which is recognized. The problem can no longer be prevented.

Third is the Ongoing Crisis Stage. This is the stage of discouragement because solving the problem takes time. The results of the problem are seen clearly and it may seem there is no end in sight.

Fourth is the Crisis Resolution Stage. This is the stage of recovery. As the problem is managed, hope returns. Although the crisis is resolved, careful watch is still important. One does not want the problem to return.

Let's Practice!

What stage is the crisis in?

Instructions: Read the sentences. Match the two halves to correctly complete the sentences. Number 1 to 7 to organize The Stages of Crisis Management. Read the text aloud. Check your pronunciations with your teacher.

Learning Points

Organizing Points in an Argument

There are many ways to organize points in an argument. One clear method is to use ordinal numbers (first, second, third ...).

An ordinal number may be the subject of your sentence if you can state the topic of your point as a noun.

Example: First is listening. It is useless to present an argument if you do not know the other person's position.

Second is clarification. You must be certain you completely understand.

An ordinal number may also be followed by a comma, before the main clause.

First, I want you to listen to this recording.

Second, please make notes every time you find an error.

Using ordinal numbers as the subject of your sentence for each main point	Using ordinal numbers to introduce the main clause explaining your point
First is ... Second is ... Third is ... Fourth is ...	First, Second, Third, Fourth,

First method:

Politics is like a game.

- First are the teams.
- Second are the fans.
- Third are the people who don't care at all.
- Fourth is the competition.

Second method:

Politics is like a game.

- First, there are teams. The members are chosen according to their abilities.
- Second, you have fans. People choose which side they prefer and they put a lot of energy into supporting their team.
- Third, you have people who don't care at all. They don't think the game (or politics) is relevant to their lives.
- Fourth, you have competition.

Using the Present Passive When Solving a Problem

The Simple Present Passive tense is used when an action is performed on another object

Learning Points

(person or thing) in the present. Put the object at the beginning of the clause. Then use the verb 'to be' in the present tense, followed by the past participle of your verb.

Here are some situations that are stated in the Simple Present tense using the Active Form. The problem solving steps are stated in the Simple Present tense using the Passive Form.

Situation 1 (Present Tense: Active Form)

- Imagine (active) a herd of cows that have worms (object).

Problem Solving Steps (Present Tense: Passive Form)

1. First, the animals are given medicine. (Present Passive)
2. Second, the animals are carefully watched. (Present Passive)

Situation 2 (Present Tense: Active Form)

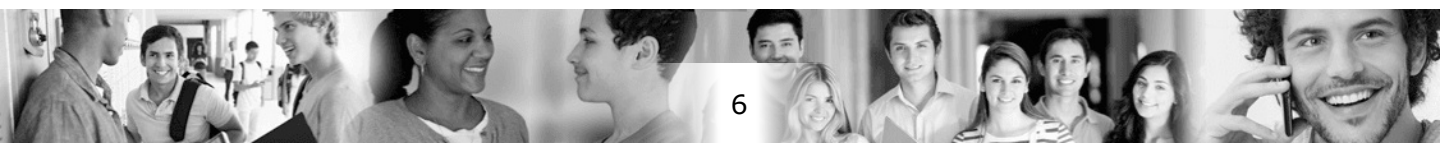

- Now imagine a business (object) that has problems.

Problem Solving Steps (Present Tense: Passive Form)

1. The business deal is offered. (Present Passive)
2. The business deal is observed. (Present Passive)

Situation	Using Present Tense in Active Form to Describe Problem Solving Steps	Using the Present Passive to Describe the Steps
A man has a vision problem.	The man looks for someone to give him a doctor's appointment.	The man is given a doctor's appointment.
	The doctor refers the man to a specialist.	The man is referred to a specialist by his doctor.
	The specialist examines the man's vision.	The man is examined by the specialist.
	The specialist orders a prescription for glasses.	The man is ordered a prescription for glasses by the specialist.
	The glasses correct the man's vision.	The man's vision is corrected by the glasses.

Notice how the man remains the subject of attention no matter what other things happen. The present passive voice is very useful to keep attention on your subject if you have multiple steps to introduce.

Learning Points

Look at some examples of the Present Passive in a question form:

Examples:

Can these issues be resolved quickly?

What is the first thing that should be done?

How many people can be added to the meeting list?

How are crises prevented by business owners?
